Target paper
3 Elizabeth Milne, John Swettenham, and Ruth Campbell. Motion perception and autistic spectrum disorder: A review

Commentaries
35 Ana Maria Abreu and Francesca Happé. Perceiving ASD through the motions
44 Dagmara Annaz and Annette Karmiloff-Smith. Cross-syndrome, cross-domain comparisons of development trajectories
48 Janette Atkinson and Oliver Braddick. Dorsal stream vulnerability and autistic disorders: the importance of comparative studies of form and motion coherence in typically developing children and children with developmental disorders
59 Simon Baron-Cohen. Enhanced attention to detail and hyper-systemizing in autism
65 Matthew K. Belmonte. Abnormal visual motion processing as a neural endophenotype of autism
75 Armando Bertone, Laurent Mottron, and Jocelyn Faubert. Dissociating pathway-versus complexity-specific accounts of motion perception impairments in autism
84 Jacob A. Burack, Natalie Russo, Anna Matejka-Grivas, Anna Bonnel, and Grace larocci. Science in motion: The quest for coherence in emerging research on autism
94 Tony Charman, Catherine Jones, and Anita Marsden. Identifying clinical subgroups and associations between cognition and behaviour: Challenges for the experimental neuropsychology of autism
104 Bruno Gepner, France Lainé, and Carole Tardif. E-motion mis-sight and other temporal processing disorders in autism
122 Christopher Jarrold and Nicholas E. Scott-Samuel. Motion perception in autism spectrum disorder: we’ll move forward once the data become coherent
132 Cary S. Kogan and Avi Chaudhuri. Current dilemmas in the choice of stimulus regimes for the study of visual perceptual deficits in clinical populations
143 Peter Mitchell, Timothy Ledgeway, and Oriane Landry. Abnormal motion perception in autism: Implications for primacy, heterogeneity, diagnosis and further research
153 Laurent Mottron and M. Dawson. Against “motion perception impairment” and its anatomical counterpart, “magnocellular deficit”, as identifiable aspects of autistic perceptual differences
157 Marina Pavlova. Biological motion, autism, and brain connectivity
163 Elizabeth Pellicano. Mapping cognition onto the brain: ‘weak’ central coherence and global grouping 172 Kate Plaisted and Greg Davis. Examining magnocellular processing in autism
180 Franck Ramus. Motion perception deficit: risk factor or non-specific marker for neuro-developmental disorders?
189 Susan M. Rivera and Kami Koldewyn. Unraveling the mystery of motion perception impairments in autism: Some further considerations
198 Cécile Rondan and Christine Deruelle. Developmental trends in visuo-spatial abilities in the autistic pathology
205 Yukari Takarae and John A. Sweeney. Visual motion processing in autism: What studies on visuomotor behaviors tell us