PZAF provides a friendly forum for postgraduate and early career zooarchaeology researchers to present their work and to meet others in a similar position. This informal conference is hosted by the University of Sheffield Zooarchaeology Laboratory, and presentations may take place over either one or two days depending on demand. In addition to academic discussion, PZAF is also dedicated to networking, and opportunities to socialise will also feature on the agenda. Oral and poster presentations are restricted to students and early career researchers, although attendance by the wider academic and professional community is encouraged. Please visit the website for more information on PZAF and for more details on this event. We look forward to seeing you in November!
