Online psychotherapy training in Europe

Professor Digby Tantam
Emmy van Deurzen
Chris Blackmore
Introduction to SEPTIMUS

“Strengthening European Psychotherapy through Innovative Methods and Unification of Standards”

A Leonardo-funded three year project

Co-ordinated from the UK at the Centre for Study of Conflict and Reconciliation by Prof Digby Tantam and Prof Emmy van Deurzen

Designed to widen accessibility to psychotherapy training by offering places to those normally excluded on the basis of:

1. Geographical isolation from training centres
2. Disability/mobility issues
3. Work/family commitments
Introduction (contd.)

- 8 countries involved in SEPTIMUS- Austria, Czech Republic, Ireland, Italy, Poland, Portugal, Romania, UK
- UK (Sheffield University) set up the Virtual Learning Environment (VLE) and gave access to other institutes
- VLE consisted of:
  A. Webpages (for the course material)
  B. Discussion forums (for student interaction and learning)
  C. Chatroom (for student interaction and learning)
A. SEPTIMUS Webpages

6 Units of course material-
1. health and well-being
2. existential and human issues
3. conflict and reconciliation
4. Overview of different methods of psychotherapy and personal change
5. Ethics and culture in psychotherapy and counselling
6. Development through the life-cycle: normal, distressing, and disabling

Well-Being and Mental Health
Learning objectives for week

to consider the different philosophical perspectives on the notion of well-being and mental health formulate your own position in relation to the issues.

Week Two: The philosopher's view-point

Contents
Week Two: The philosopher's view-point

Contents

- introduction to "well being" and what it has meant over the centuries in western culture
- some of the significant philosophers
- right to well-being- a case study
- rights and responsibilities
- right to treatment
- summary
- questions
- references

It is important to note that YOU ARE NOT EXPECTED TO WORK YOUR WAY THROUGH ALL OF THIS WEEK’S MATERIAL. We have deliberately included a large amount of material which will act as a resource which can be used later on in the course. You will probably only look at a fraction of material this week.

Introduction

To begin with, some definitions:

What is well-being?
What is philosophy?

There are some very profound questions which over time humans have sought to answer, perhaps because we seem to be driven to find meaning in life and these questions offer us the possibility of getting at this meaning. However, although deceptively simple, these questions often prove to be extremely difficult to answer. For example, what, in this life, can we be certain of? What is real? How do we know it is real? Does it matter? The attempts to answer such questions can be infuriating and have led to philosophy’s reputation as incomprehensible or pointless.

Philosophical questions such as “what is real?” may not have much to do with our day-to-day survival. After all, when contemplating sitting down, we are not concerned about whether a chair is “real” - this is usually taken for granted - but rather whether it will be comfortable, take our weight, etc. However, society’s opinions on these topics can have profound and far-reaching implications for us as we go through our lives. And perhaps one of humankind’s main preoccupations throughout history has been deciding what is this thing called “happiness”, how do you obtain it and how do you know that you have got it?

Such philosophical debate has its roots in Ancient Greek civilization. Before this time, civilizations such as those of the Ancient Egyptians or Babylonians, although very sophisticated in terms of mathematical and astronomical knowledge, tended to look for explanations of life in religious terms. The Greeks were among the first, as far as we know, to systematically address questions such as “what is the good life” and “how can it be lived?” Their answer, in very general terms, was that the good life resides in virtue.

Of course, this is a very Western account of philosophical thought. We would do well to...

Of course, this is a very Western account of philosophical thought. We would do well to bear in mind that cultural relativism makes the process of comparing cultures a potentially hazardous one - what one culture values highly may not be similarly valued in another. There are also centuries of thought handed down from Eastern traditions. For example, when thinking about well-being and its absence, (Zen) Buddhism gives us the powerful notion of "acceptance of the void". The ancient Chinese teachings of Confucianism suggest that the good life arises from an orderly society where everyone diligently carries out their duties and responsibilities.

Questions

Do students enjoy this kind of study?
Do they prefer it to traditional “face-to-face” teaching methods?
Are tutors satisfied with their learning?
Has the programme widened accessibility to training?

To answer these questions, data was collected from each student:
- application data
- feedback from student on each unit (32 item questionnaire)
- feedback on student’s progress from tutor
- data on their use of VLE
Do students enjoy this kind of study?

- At the end of each Unit, students were given a 32-item feedback questionnaire on all aspects of the course.

- Data from 156 students show variation between countries:
SEPTIMUS student feedback Oct 2002 - June 2004

1- Not at all; 2- A little; 3- Medium; 4- Quite a lot; 5- Very much

Do students enjoy this kind of study?

Data suggests that students are fitting in SEPTIMUS around their normal work patterns:

- Peaks in activity before and after work, and at lunchtime
- More study done during the week (and the most on Mondays)

Do students prefer eLearning to traditional methods?

- We also did a study to compare student satisfaction and performance with online vs. traditional psychotherapy training courses.
- In Romania, Ireland and the UK, students who had completed a psychotherapy training course by traditional classroom teaching were recruited.
- 59 students were given a 32-item questionnaire to complete asking for feedback on traditional teaching methods for psychotherapy.
- This was compared with existing data from SEPTIMUS students.

Do students prefer eLearning to traditional methods?

- When comparing the e-learners (n= approx 111) with traditional learners (n=61), the results seem consistently more favourable for the e-learning method.
- Students appear to spend much longer engaged in learning with e-learning courses.
- Presumably this learning is of a different sort/intensity.
- NB - there is no guarantee of the equivalence of the two types of courses.
Are tutors satisfied with their learning?

- Partner and tutor feedback says that they are very satisfied with the quality of the course material.
- The performance of students is comparable to traditional courses.
- So long as tutors establish confidentiality, openness and trust, the online environment seems to encourage students to engage in far more self-disclosure of personal material than is usually the case in classroom-based material.
- So students are able to apply the course material more directly to their own experience.
Has SEPTIMUS widened accessibility to psychotherapy training?

Application data says that of 156 students who enrolled:

- over 50% live further than 100 km from the training centre
- 7% have a disability
- 65% have been prevented from previously applying for training
  Of these, the most common reasons were:
- lack of practical experience/ academic qualifications (60%)
- financial limitations (54%)
- geographical distance (56%)
- childcare responsibilities (19%)

So SEPTIMUS has achieved its main goal of widening accessibility to psychotherapy training by using e-learning methods. But is it preferable to traditional ways of teaching psychotherapy?
The Future

- The project finished in October 2004
- The units will continue to be available in the UK through Sheffield University Masters in Medical and Health Sciences (Psychotherapy Studies pathway)
- Other countries are making similar moves to integrate SEPTIMUS units into their own training programmes
- An application has been made for a Leonardo-funded project to disseminate SEPTIMUS to up to 27 other European countries where SEPT reported that psychotherapy training by distance learning is needed
The Future

- A further project started in October 2004 called DEEP - Dissemination of European Education in Psychotherapy
- DEEP project is to create a new Masters level course in a University
- Funded by the ERASMUS fund of the SOCRATES programme
- Incorporates SEPTIMUS material
The Future

- Designed to give students the theoretical knowledge required to become psychotherapists.
- May be studied alongside a practical component (local supervised placement, personal therapy).
- These materials will be integrated into University-based psychotherapy training courses in:
  - Austria (Sigmund Freud University)
  - Sweden (Linkoping University)
  - Czech Republic (Masaryk University)
  - Romania (Hyperion University)
  - UK (Sheffield University)
