A Guide to Doing Mixed Methods Studies in the Health Sciences
1 day Course: Monday, 8th June 2015

Overview
The course will follow the process of undertaking a mixed method study from developing research questions, selecting an appropriate design, integration of data and findings, through to reporting in peer reviewed publications. It will also cover key issues such as relevant paradigms, quality assessment, team working and structural issues affecting mixed methods research. The focus will be on health research, particularly health care research. The day will be interactive, drawing on participants experience of mixed methods research.

Who will benefit from the course?
Researchers who have undertaken, are undertaking or are planning to undertake a mixed methods study in the health sciences. Researchers from outside health sciences are very welcome but the day will be focused on health research.

Learning outcomes
By the end of this course participants should be able to:
- Describe the key aspects of mixed methods studies
- Design a good quality mixed methods study
- Recognise the challenges involved in undertaking mixed methods research
