Explore the diverse archaeological evidence for life in the Classical Mediterranean world.

Deepen understanding through integration of ‘humanities’ and ‘science-based’ approaches.

Investigate the complementary strengths of textual, iconographic and other material sources.

Themes include landscape change, material culture and identity, field survey, excavation and lab analysis.

Student feedback 2013-15:
“I have enjoyed all my modules and feel like I have improved my knowledge of the classical world and archaeological techniques.”

“The Department is everything I hoped it would be in its inter-disciplinary style and the approachability of the lecturers. I feel very comfortable expressing my views and research on the topics studied.”

Core modules
• Greeks, Romans and ‘Others’in the Ancient World
• Rethinking the Ancient Economy
• Reinventing Archaeology
• Research Design: Planning, Execution and Presentation
• Dissertation in Archaeological of the Classical Mediterranean

Plus a range of optional modules including: Mediterranean Landscapes, Archaeology of Classical Athens, Roman Italy and its Hinterland, Current Issues in Aegean Prehistory, Funerary Archaeology, as well as ancient history options and a range of ancient and modern languages.
