Title: Miller Pamphlets

Scope: A collection of pamphlets gathered by Harold Miller (1909-1995), medical physicist

Dates: 1924-1969

Extent: 304 volumes

Name of creator: Harold Miller, OBE, PhD, DSc

Administrative / biographical history:

The collection consists of pamphlets gathered by Harold Miller which relate to his interests in medical physics, the Methodist church, social justice and world peace.

Harold Miller (1909-1995) was born and raised in the coal-mining area of Staveley, North-east Derbyshire, strongly influenced by the Primitive Methodism of his family and Labour Party politics (cf. Growing up with Primitive Methodism by Harold Miller, 1995), and a deep commitment to Christianity and social ideals remained evident throughout his later life and career. From Netherthorpe Grammar School in 1928 he won an Open Scholarship to St. John’s College, Cambridge, and there took a first class degree in Physics. He was a research student at the Cavendish Laboratory, the foremost centre of atomic physics, during the era of Lord Rutherford, and gained a PhD under the supervision of Sir James Chadwick. For the next seven years he worked in the Research Department of EMI doing fundamental research in a team which established the first successful system for commercial television. As a committed pacifist he refused military service during WWII, and instead undertook hospital work, being appointed in 1942 Medical Physicist to the Sheffield National Centre for Radiotherapy, where he was involved in the development of medical radiophysics in clinical work, later becoming Chief Physicist of what became an independent Regional Department of Medical Physics. He became President of the Hospital Physicists Association, President of the British Institute of Radiology, and in 1972 Professor Associate of Medical Physics at the University of Sheffield, which awarded him an honorary degree in 1980. In recognition of his work he was awarded an OBE in 1972. On retirement in 1975 he left in being a large and comprehensive service department and a developing academic department in the Royal Hallamshire Hospital; following retirement he played a major role in the setting up of a Day Care Unit at Weston Park Hospital.

In the post-war world Harold Miller took a keen interest in the development of medical services in the Third World, also playing a part in the Pugwash group of scientists who endeavoured to direct the use of atomic energy to peaceful objectives. He spent several periods abroad on these activities.
